Letter from the editors:

To whomever recieves this,
We at The Plumber's Faucet have taken it upon ourselves to go undercover and report on McGill's biggest mysteries, controversies, and Richards.

Why are we so obsessed with Dicks?
Wouldn't you like to know...

We have called upon the EUS' best crossword experts to handle the case: Luca and Nicolas.

Your only hint?

Deep. Dymetri. Donovan.

It all leads back to a big 'D'.

Watch your 6.

EUS President Awards Faucet Staff With Iron Rings Danika Pole

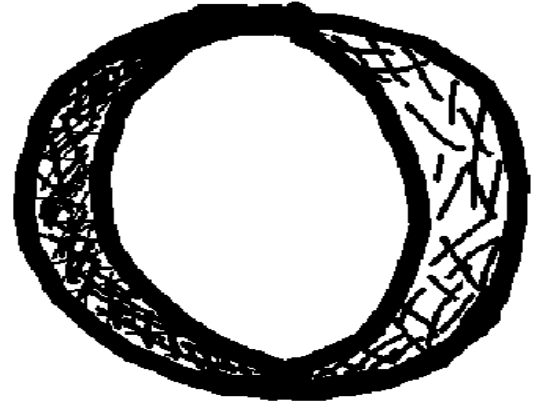

This past tax season, the Engineering Undergraduate Society realized it had a valuable dependent under its belt: The Plumber's Faucet. Once thought to be a money pit, the Faucet has proven time and time again to maintain EUS's relations beyond Blues' Pub.

In spite of Blues' controversial new admittance requirements, the spirit of The Plumber's Faucet has protected the faculty from ultimate devastation. In honour of the writers' service to culture and commitment to journalism, EUS President, Donovan Burt, has promised to bestow iron rings onto the contributors of The Plumber's Faucet.

Sure, none of us are technically engineers. Sure, most of us haven't taken a physics course since high school. And sure, most of us only associate with the EUS in hopes of seducing a future sugar daddy/mommy/gender-non-conforming-yet-hot-asf-dom. But one thing's for certain: we would never write a metaphorical bridge with faulty materials.

We unfailingly produce only the best and the strongest reports in the world, and the most organic as well, as we protest the charade of 'consistency' and embrace a publication schedule based on 'vibes.'

The ceremony is set to take place at 9AM on April 20th, 2026 in the fieldhouse. All are encouraged to attend, though seats can only be promised to those who are scheduled for an exam. But, hey! Isn't that the perfect opportunity to meet your next new best friend?

Saini's Super Sale Danika Pole

This past spring, millions of depressed McGill students logged onto Facebook Marketplace in search of the next apartment to wait out their seasonal depression. Amidst the illegal deposits and old men looking for a "nice young girl," a historic sale was made. Our very own President Deep Saini sold McGill University to Lockheed Martin.

After witnessing the everydayman participate in this past summer's Naked Bike Ride event on a $3.40 Bixi rental, Saini was reportedly disgusted and sought to divorce the university from the "too gay" Montreal.

This decision comes after years of an ongoing feud with the Quebec government over McGill's lack of so-called "French" culture on campus. Hot-dog man has yet to provide students with a baguette option, which they posit should cost two dollars; a third of the price paid by your average Canadian. Saini, all the while, is yet to release a response or otherwise show any reliable sign of life. The McGill administration has also refused to comment on this feud, claiming that they're pretty sure 'McGill' is some gay reference to Heated Rivalry.

Inside sources report that Lockheed Martin was unaware of a number of McGill's money-pits, such as what remains of the arts, science, and music departments. Many parents are outraged that their children didn't make that list.

The new owners have plans to turn MacDonald campus into a six lane highway and make the downtown campus a 9/11-inspired tourist trap.

Students can expect a slight increase in fees to compensate for such renovations. Other than that, members of the McGill community should expect business to go on as usual.

Oh no! New SSMU Board of Directors Elected Danika Pole

Wow! Another SSMU election has concluded with around 6,000 of the 27,000 undergraduates voting in the next generation of Board of Directors executives. The Plumber's Faucet, the most upstanding news source on campus, would like to introduce these officials to our devoted readers, so that you may feel vindicated for ignoring those elections@ssmu emails.

Almost a quarter of students have spoken! Here's what they had to say.

President - Hamza Abu-Alkhair

Can anyone truly replace the King of Campus, Dymetri Taylor? King's been SSMU President/ tangential to SSMU presidency for the past three years. Many members of the staff struggle to imagine what life may look like without him. There are rumours that many SSMU staff members plan to stage a coup to immortalize Dymetri Taylor as the official Daddy of SSMU.

Anywho, this guy! Hamza Abu-Alkhair... Prez-y Za-Bu-Bu... Big Ham... it's just not the same...

Vice-President (Clubs and Services) - Acadia Knickerbocker

Whose name sounds like a British slur for a gay man? Knickerbocker! Acadia is a pretty sweet first name, though. Will Knickerbocker be the VP to finally provide McGill students with sled rentals? If we're going to live on the Arctic Belt, we might as well take advantage of all the sky dandruff.

Vice-President (University Affairs) - Megan Lai

Her name looks like the word "lie." I guess we're all into bad boys. Is that why I can't seem to find one? Lai and STAND were this past elections' most competitive adversaries, but you know, winter depression and all that. Anywho: Kiss Sustainability, Marry Financial Aid & Bursary, and Kill Administrative Board of Directors... Anarchy and self-destruction are looking pretty sexy, too. Will Lai be able to satisfy our collective horniness? Let's find out!

Vice-President (Internal Affairs) - Maggie Tang

With a platform built on the three pillars of "inclusion, safety, and good vibes," we are excited to see how Tang intends to implement these "vibes" on campus considering our next candidate...

Besides that, we hope Tang is able to find the help that they need and guide SSMU in all of its soul searching and meditation and karma calculations and self-acceptance.

Vice-President (External Affairs) - Justice Bongiovani

Comparing himself to David fighting Goliath, Bongiovanni intends to reform the executive board with GASP a gun?! Someone get him quick before his name becomes ironic!

On a related note, The Plumber's Faucet would like to assure the McGill community that we did not create Bongiovanni. Upon the announcement of the election results, we learned that he was in fact a legitimate candidate, and not an elaborate pun. We do wonder, though, if political positions may be his birthright?

If he goes the law route, he may end up Justice Justice Bon-Gee-oH!

His clients would always have Justice. They would never have to seek it- and who would stalk a court proceeding if it didn't include that sexy thrill of the chase?

Prime Minister Justice Bongiovanni is a title we could get behind.

The Plumber's Faucet has selected JB to take King Tay-Tay's place as our God. Will he be able to fill Big D's shoes? Will he stay in office long enough for us to find out?

Does anyone else suspect that one of these people has to be Dymetri Taylor undercover?

Hot diggity darn! Is it getting hot in here or is it just the political climate on campus heating up to a horrifying degree?

The Plumber's Faucet cannot wait to see how these seven people intend to work together to do... something on campus to do with boards? Could someone email us about what exactly their jobs are before the next election?

Besides that, we can say with 95% certainty that all of these individuals are in fact real people and that there do exist individuals who value their souls at $35,000/year.

One thing is for certain, the undergraduate population of McGill University is tired. They spend their days hiking up and slipping down hills, standing in lines and showers and in the middle of sidewalks. I hope that in the coming year, these exhausted voters get the lounge-chair arrangements of their dreams.

Marty Goes Missing
Janice Choppedlin

Marty the Martlet is a sad, hollow husk of what he once was. This past Tuesday, every single one of the artists on his rotating staff of performers quit. Believe it or not, this is only a small chapter in a crisis rocking units and sports teams around the globe. Everywhere, it seems, mascot-operators are abandoning their higher purpose in droves. The cause? Every single one of them is pursuing a career in the nascent costume-wearing-microtonal-prog-rock industry.

Yes, that is an industry now. Those who follow the rock scene and/or receive strange videos on their YouTube recommended will likely be familiar with Angine de Poitrine, a polka-dotted duo that's been making quite a stir. Though they boast complex, looped riffs and tight beats, what's most impressive about the brothers Poitrine is that they do it all in mascot-esque suits. And, apparently, that is the most difficult part of their performance.

Realizing that they are overqualified for the whole mascot thing and positive that they can pick up math-rock guitar in a couple weeks (how hard could it be?), each one of our once-Marties has ditched the bird in search of stardom. Will we see a rising tide of ex-martlet stars? Will they be crushed by the unbearable pressure of fame? It remains to be seen. All I know is that the biggest surprise about the mascot shortage is that it isn't somehow related to the recent varsity budget cuts.

The Mythic Bitch In Your Spreadsheets

I've come face-to-face with the coveted mythic bitch and am sorry to inform you that she is certifiably real. I'd love to keep her locked away in legends, but she walks and grows among us. It is imperative that you believe me and heed my warnings.

You can spot her in the wild:

- Disturbing to Google Calendar
- Commenting AI-generated suggestions under LinkedIn posts
- Masquerading as a Sugar Mommy Martyr (as if their arts degree could possibly finance my lifestyle)
- Collecting 'skills' like Pokemon
- Claiming not to know what Pokemon is
- Claiming Canva templates count as 'graphic design'

Blood Clot-y Tampon Sucker
PoliSci Addicts Anonymous

Female hormones make women too irrational to hold leadership positions. The alphabet mafia and liberal snowflakes are morons for thinking otherwise. The universe has lasted over a billion years without a single female president of the USA. If the greatest nation in the world has never needed nor benefited from women, what grounds do we have to propose that boobs won't combust if they were to take on the fight for freedom?

The powers that be already have to work around the nap and poop schedules of those selected to mascot their operation. Imagine if the White House was ever painted red. Within that first ever presidential shark week, all facades would tear away to reveal the true nature of our overlords, and she'd laugh just as your elder sister did when she informed you about why your aunt doesn't come to Thanksgiving anymore.

Now she spends her days in a Subaru. I can still hear her keys jingle on that carabiner. If only I had stepped in sooner.

I can still feel the pain of learning of my aunt's fall to lesbian-feminist-charchuterie board propaganda.

Why?! That bitch said I was her 'best guy'. I thought I was special. I thought I was of the greatest caste of men. She saw me. Despite her obscured lesbian vision, she saw me. Am I a woman?

Scientifically speaking, the beginning of their cycle leaves estrogen victims vulnerable to tacky financial decisions. Experts suggest that this may be due to their obsession with finding a mate to dedicate themselves to. During this time, women become 'hyper-consumers' with their hearts set on vain plots for 'self-improvement'. A research lab speculates that this impulse would likely manifest as an over-investment into conceited internal infrastructure improvements. In the very worst case, the powers that be may no longer be able to get through to them as their ears get clogged with q-tips.

A period is designed to punish women that fail in the womanly duty to conceive and bear children. At that time of the month, victims need not be gaslit into thinking that life is worth living, let alone starting. Their weak and defenseless minds are forced to confront the world in its unadulterated glory.

Menstruating mothers drop their pursuit of nutritional and well-rounded offspring. Menstruating mothers become hands-off, gluttonous narcissists. Menstruating mothers crumble. They lose their game face. They reveal that 'Santa isn't real' and 'watching TV on weekdays won't kill you' and 'you were and continue to be the worst mistake of her life'. Goddamnit, for the greater good, never trust a human-ketchup-bottle.

Do you need proof?

The rose-coloured filters literally melt away and drip right through and out of them. Non-period havers have improved plumbing, but their rose-colored privileges still spontaneously fall out from a hole when they inevitably give-out.

Bill 21

Justin Perry

Quebec Supreme Court voted to pass Bill 21, legislation that will outlaw public workers from wearing any religious and cultural garb while they're working their shift. As someone who is neither religious nor cultured, I maintain the autonomy to wear whatever I like. Schmucks like you, however, must suffer for being naive believers.

Construction workers' are unable to utilize any element of the Canadian tuxedo, and are thus forced to lay cement in trousers and board shorts. Civil engineers have been forced to abandon their performative orange hats and yellow vests, instead wearing the Patagonia and khakis of their engineering peers.

Perhaps the most affected include the lovely Italian-Catholic Godfathers who have permanently decorated their fists in crucifixes and other Bible-y stuff. Many have renounced their allegiance to the Pope and have instead chosen to commemorate the lowercase 't'.

Politicians are growing wary of the growing cult and have since promised to take radical action. As a response, former Godfathers seek to anonymize their community via engraving their mark on young drunkards who just so happen to stumble into their tattoo shops. Experts urge public workers to hit the thrift and log into Shein, lest their clothes become any more than cover-ups for their privates.

ICE Cools

RainbowSnowcone69

The McGill Board of Governors is currently facing strong opposition due to their contracts with GardaWorld. In order to recover their indie-film-boy image, the executive council will be starring in a revamped music video to Vanilla Ice's classic 1990 single "Ice Ice Baby," entitled "ICE ICE Baby."

"The student body, general public, and anyone with a soul left seems to have a negative opinion of ICE," says the Board's spokesperson. "We're here to make a statement: ICE can be cool! I don't see any issue with doing business with one of their major subcontractors."

Much like Vanilla Ice's track, the spokesperson went on to explain, the Board's music video will be a work of artistic collaboration. "You know, Vanilla Ice sampled 'Under Pressure' for his magnum opus, and now we're just gonna sample him. Haters will say it's the exact same song, and honestly, maybe it is. The flow of art really creates an interlinked community. It's a lot like how McGill contracts with GardaWorld, and they contract with ICE: in a way, we're all part of the same team."

The Board of Gobs, famous for their high responsivity to human rights violations, is breaking into avant-garde artistic territory. Their upcoming meeting will feature an art installation, consisting entirely of blank canvases. Among its premier titles will be "Policy for Divestment" and "Accountability for Royal Vic MKULTRA victims."

My Genitals and Soul are Broken
Amelia H. Clark

DEAR NORTH STAR,

I turn to you, Sister Mary North-Star, because unfortunately no priest has been able to help with this problem. In fact they have done everything possible to masturbate—sorry—exacerbate it with their advice.

For the last three months to seven years I have been struggling with thoughts of same-sex attraction. I did purchase your self-help book Living Straight and Lovin' It: How to Better Conjure Romance When Your Genitals and Soul are Made Wrong, but I unfortunately haven't been able to practice your advice. Maybe you can clarify some of the steps you wrote, and if it's not too much to ask, teach me how to better apply them?

Part one, on "Broken Genitals," definitely comes into play in my case. I know some guys can "fake it till' they make it," so I really appreciate you giving grace to those of us who simply can't. It's not for a lack of trying—moreso, a general inability to fake the sounds. I've never been great at acting, and everyone from my Sunday school teacher to my latest girlfriend has commented on my "flat" delivery of lines such as "Yes, God," "Come, my beloved," and "My joy hath come in you so that your joy may be complete." How could I deliver that last one with true soul when in her presence I felt emptier than ever?

See, I did actually try to "pray on it," as you suggested in the chapter, but to no avail. Every single time I got on my knees I just couldn't get my head on—forgive my language—straight, for I couldn't help but think of the horrible things I've seen on T.V. It's horrendous the way they advertise this devilish lifestyle so that poor impressionable boys like me fall right into it. The things I saw as a CHILD have certainly infected my very person to the point that I am no longer able to function normally with a woman—including, but not limited to, a man in a tank top!

Part Two, on "Broken Soul," was more enlightening. I know the problem never laid on the shoulders of my ex alone... except for that one time she wore green and pink together. Even a straight man wouldn't touch that combination!

Anywho, is there hope for my soul, sister?

— Empty Believer

DEAR EMPTY BELIEVER

Thank you for buying my book! I'm so happy you took the time to read both parts (though clearly without taking the advice into complete consideration). I understand it's a lot to decipher, but trust I wrote it with people like you in mind. Even though you are still struggling, there is a clear path out of homosexuality and into God's loving arms. And, asking me for help is the first step on the long winding walk there, which will end at a Barnes & Noble.

That's right, readers: I'm releasing a sequel for the same-sex deviants who couldn't kick the old mind virus with my first book! This one will dig deeper into the believer, entering them body and mind, rather than genitals and soul.

The "Body" chapter will not address readers' genitals personally, but rather aspects of the opposite sex's body. It will include a map pointing to devilish parts, those bits you aren't supposed to notice in church, but that this nun is directly demanding you pay more attention to. So, you don't find a woman's shoulder sexy? Who cares! Make it sexy by imagining devious, devilish things happening around that shoulder. Maybe there's a bra strap holding something down underneath? Or, in your case, Empty Believer, picture that someone has drawn a penis on that shoulder with a permanent marker. Bet you're interested now!

For the "Mind", think about the inner aspects of your person UNRELATED to sexual attraction that need changing. If you are living a homosexual lifestyle in your day-to-day it's impossible to expect the inner workings of your brain to gravitate towards heterosexual desires. You need to cut out any aspects of LGBTQ+ culture that may be signalling to the rest of your person an unavoidable attachment to the community.

Do you watch Drag Race? Hit the "thrift," as the kids call it? Go out with the boys not to pick up chicks, but to go out with the boys? Stop.

Stop it all right now because this is exactly the type of activity which leads one's mind off the path of righteousness, and the rest of the body, soul, and genitals with it.

I'll send you a copy personally, Empty Believer, so that you may feel full of Christ, and no other man.

Sincerely,

Sister Mary North-Star of Ballcock

Wanted: Summer Intern in Hell Satan Christ

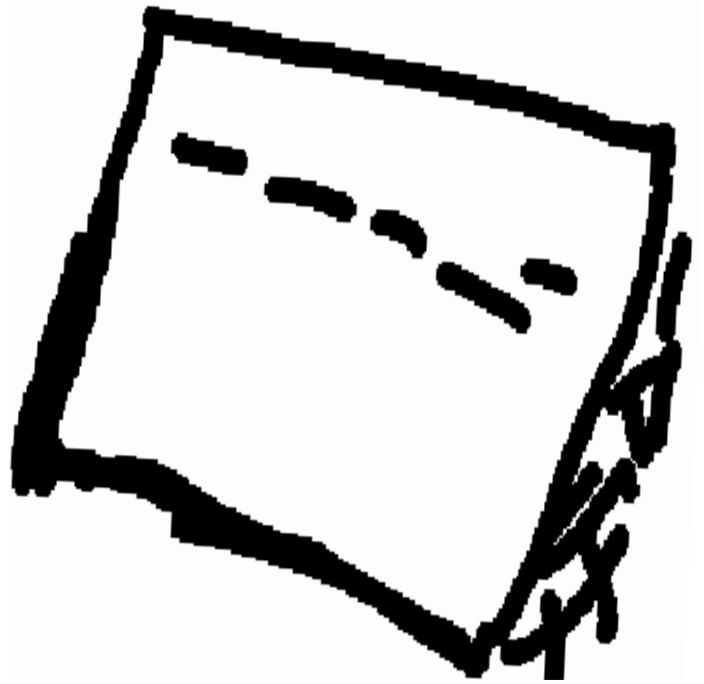

Hiya folks! It's me, Satan. I know internship-hunting season is coming to a close, and let's face it: even if you applied to three boat loads of postings, you're probably not getting a spot in this cutthroat market. Well I have news for you... I, Satan from the Bible, am looking for interns back at the Hell office.

I know, I know, it's not what you had in mind, but I'd wager the perks will change your tune. It's a long way down to the bowels of Tartarus (we just call it downtown here). You're probably thinking, 'that would be a hell of a commute.' It certainly would. Thankfully, we offer all our interns free room and board. You'll sleep like royalty every night in your very own flaming coffin, right next to the Lake of Fire. That's right: fire-front property. What, is sleeping in a claustrophobic torture device too good for you? Do you really think you can afford a better apartment in Toronto, or Vancouver, or... Jesus, and they say my place is hellish!

Anyway, you'll also get your very own company pitchfork. It's made of a sweet ass alloy composed of unnamed metals from the roots of the seven highest mountains. I know that you materials-track engineers would descend into rapture just looking at this shit. Plus, it's shiny.

Make no mistake, it'll be hard work. You'll be doing some rigorous prodding at least two hours a day. The rest of your shift will be devoted to a mixture of aura farming on LinkedIn, fetching flaming hot coffees for Beezy and the team, and updating our Excel spreadsheet of all the naughty souls on earth. We're big into A.I. down here, so at least you won't have to waste your time writing emails.

The hours aren't too bad, though. Since there is neither day nor night here in Hell, I can personally guarantee that you will never struggle with woke concepts like 'time-management' and 'work-life-balance'. What's more, the position is great experience for a more ahem permanent career with us (don't kid yourself, you know you'll be relocating to the area sooner or later). Honestly, in late-stage capitalism this is one of the more ethically sound organizations you could intern with. At the very least, you won't have to try and convince yourself that your coffee's fair-trade every morning. We embrace the blood in those delectable grounds!!!

The Procrastinator's Guide to an Extension Request Andy Icarus

Finals season is here & the pile of unfinished work is growing. But don't sacrifice your sleep or your health for a deadline: use this expert tested template instead to secure an extension in our modern age.

Subject: Paper Submission Status

Dear Prof X,

I am writing to you regarding my final paper submission of the semester. I will not be able to submit it before 5:17 P.M. tomorrow. This is past our 11:59 P.M. deadline, but the situation is now out of my control. I reached my 24-hour advanced AI query limit this afternoon while completing schoolwork for another class. I was only halfway done when the tokens ran out. Thankfully, this was for my s/u graded elective, so I finished it with the basic model.

Of course, I deeply care about your course and refuse to use anything less than the advanced reasoning model to write my paper. I intend to complete it with the highest standard of care. My workflow involves running each prompt twice to cross-reference the output for errors. I apologise for the delay. The daily prompt limit for free users has never been reliable, but I cannot afford a premium subscription at this time. I hope that given my predicament you'll grant me an extension for tomorrow.

Looking forward to hearing back from you,

Signed [Your Name Here]

Some Tips:

- Know your audience. Do not use on technologically backwards professors.
- Make sure to replace 'X' with your prof's first and last name.
- Do not actually run prompts twice. It wastes your daily limit for no reason.

McGill Comedy Revue 2026: A Review of Negative Revenue

Aarti Adv

Dear McGill Theatre Community,

We regret to inform you that you were not selected to attend this year's McGill Comedy Revue.

On March 24th, only two local comedians made the cut to represent all of McGill's comical talent, and unfortunately, their act was too NSFW for your naive eyes.

The two comedians were asked to make a statement on the event, but both declined to answer due to an inadequate deposit of Everclear. After unsatisfying negotiations, they took a number of staff writers hostage and, honestly, we're still on the fence as to whether or not we should try to get them back. All of those who were kidnapped are likely safer in their ethanol-infused custody as those taken belong to at-risk populations: female, 'American', water-needing, oxygen-breathing, etc.

Nevertheless, this reporter will try to satisfy your hunger for humour— or at least, whatever the McGill student community has liberally labeled as such.

Perhaps the biggest farce to grace the McGill Comedy scene is the sketch comedy troupe Bring Your Own Juice.

The group has been suspiciously inactive for the past semester, after their scandal in December 2025. At their Fall 2025 semester showcase, audience goers were led to bring their own juice to the show only to be turned away at the door due to The Players' Theatre strict anti-calorie prerogative.

Those who were able to smuggle themselves across the barricades report that at no point of the show were they instructed to utilize their juice.

An insider has confirmed that the group plans to strike again within the next two weeks. They have reportedly been planning this attack for the past three months and have every intention of seeing their plan through.

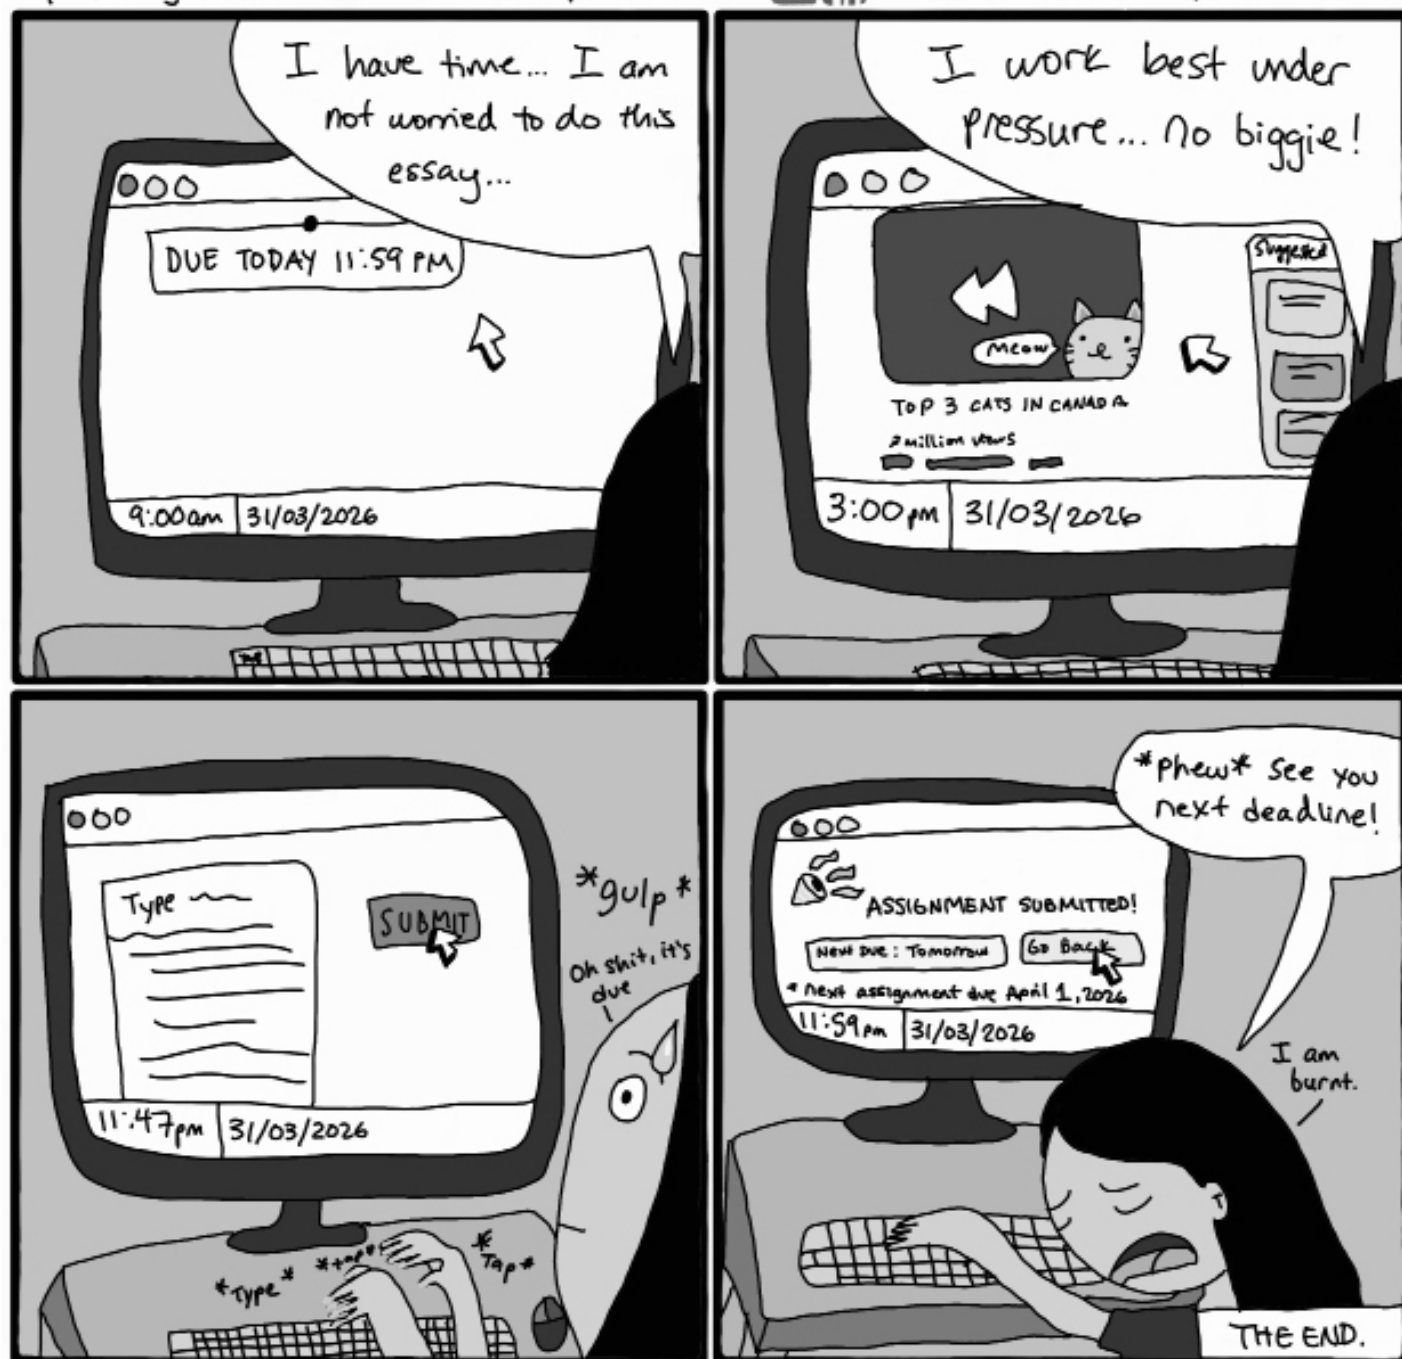

This rampant overextension of the word 'comedy' has led to major losses in revenue. Funds that had been intended for pies and unicyles, have been diverted to ease the fallout of the record number of bombings.

A joke that always lands, however, is my unofficial transcript. Offer me employment, and I may just send you a copy.
