
THE WET FEBRUARY ISSUE

The Plumber's

FAUCET

Volume LXII, Issue II

February 13th, 2026

CONTRIBUTORS

EUS VP Communications:

Octavia Francis

Editors:

Aarti Advani

Emmet Fynes (EIC)

Cover Art:

Maru Collins

Comics:

Roxanne Tesar

Britney Vu

Writers:

Aarti Advani

Eren Atac

Kai Bosniak

Amelia Clark

Emmet Fynes

Fluffy_Lemons69

Gabriel Linaje-Ferrel

Pope Leo XV

Emet Mendelson

Danika Pole

Bennett Samburg

Charlie Scholey

DISCLAIMER

The Plumber's Faucet is a Publication of the Engineering Undergraduate Society of McGill University. The opinions expressed in the Faucet are not necessarily those of the EUS, nor of any other university body, unless such opinion appears under an authorized signature of a representative of the said body. The Faucet does not print works which are sexist, libelous, racist, homophobic, or violating the copyright laws of Canada. It should be noted that some content is meant to be satirical or humorous in nature. For general enquiries, contact faucet@mcgilleus.ca

COMPLAINTS

The EUS takes complaints very seriously. All complaints should begin with the heading "Official Protest to Content in The Plumber's Faucet," and should be sent to vpcomm@eus.ca, publications.director@eus.ca, and faucet@mcgilleus.ca

NEWS

THE PLUMBER'S FAUCET PLUGS HUGO-VICTOR SOLOMON

AN INTERVIEW WITH THE EX-SSMU VP EXTERNAL
Amelia Clark

*The following interview has been shortened and edited for clarity.

Amelia H. Clark for The Plumber's Faucet (PF): You just did a talk on getting involved with SSMU politics, right? At a QPIRG event?

Hugo-Victor Solomon (HVS): Yeah, when I was first getting involved I annoyed the shit out of everyone because I was always asking questions. I realized it is so complicated, so convoluted, that unless you go in with clear ideas of what you want to accomplish, you will spend all your time immersed in a Google Drive that makes no fucking sense, and people demand things of you when you don't know what to do.

PF: I have some quotes here from the last Board of Directors meeting on Jan 20th. This is from the Chief Elections Officer. He's presenting a report on the voting turnout, quote: "We really questioned whether people don't vote because they simply don't know how, or if they had to vote. This [motioning to statistics] clearly shows that they do get sent the emails, so we know they know they can vote." With this discovery in mind, what do you think SSMU would have to do to actually make quorum on its first go?

HVS: That's the $24,500 question. It's always funny, because there are always these big debates about, 'Oh, how can we get people more involved?' and that's not writing more catchily phrased emails. It's not just a lack of PR, but a failure to be in touch with reality. You sit in that fancy office at 3501 Peel all day, air conditioned, mini fridges galore, an espresso machine, and really expensive plants. I think SSMU, they're not even good politicians. They are pretending to be good politicians and feel almost entitled to the respect that people give mediocre politicians, but they're not even that. So, I do think it's kind of an entitlement issue. Unless you are delivering in a consistent way year over year, it's going to continue to be a pretty low turnout.

PF: When you left the Board of Directors, did you think it was in good hands?

HVS: No. I was warning everybody. I was terrified. I was like, “It’s about to go downhill very fast.” I didn’t think it would go downhill that fast, though. The reason I thought it was going to go downhill is because I was fighting the VP Clubs and Services every day to not go nuclear on Midnight Kitchen (MK). What happened was actually a lot worse than I could have expected. I said to him, “You have had meetings with them. They showed you exactly what kind of facility restrictions they’re dealing with. Is there anything else that they could give you that would satisfy your skepticism?” He looked at me and said “Honestly, no,” and at that point, I was like, as soon as I leave, or maybe even before that, he’s going to pull the trigger on this, and Dymetri will be there to justify it in some kind of bureaucratic way.

What’s funny is, they do this SSMU reunion dinner for previous and current execs. This year, there weren’t enough people who attended, so they had to invite senators—very weird. Either way, I was there sitting next to Dymetri. It was just so weird. He and I are able to talk, but I’m not on speaking terms with Hamza or Seraphina, simply because if I were to speak to them, I would say what’s in my heart, and that would not end well.

The worst part about Hamza is that not only did he pull the trigger on MK, but he’s not doing his fucking job at all. I see him wandering around the Law Faculty. I look at him and think, “What are you doing here? You’re not a student here. Why are you trying to hide from people in the Law Faculty?” I see him here way more than I would see any other non-law student, like, multiple times a month! Like, “What’s up, man?” Not that non-law students are not allowed to be here, but there’s something about his slinking away here while also not doing his job.

PF: I know that at the QPIRG event you told The Tribune’s reporter, “Don’t quote my inflammatory comments on SSMU.” Could the Plumber’s Faucet run them? We don’t have a website.

HVS: My issue is, they owe me $600. That is literally the only thing.

PF: I remember—this was at one of my first BoD meetings—Dymetri Taylor said something about you running for president when he was gone and you said, “I would rather die.” I wanted to ask this back then: Can you expand on that statement?

HVS: I don’t want to do this again. Once was enough. I cannot do this while doing law school. I can barely do law school while doing law school.

PF: Who’s the nightmare option to take over when he’s gone?

HVS: Seraphina. She’s expressed interest, actually. She wants to be a liberal politician. She said one of her main campaign promises was, “I want to deliver on the tuition hikes.” Girl, what? That’s not an issue that you have control of. She said, “I’m gonna go talk to the federal representative.” Girl, it’s a provincial issue. And she’s going, why? Because she wants to talk to liberal representatives for the sake of it.

Doing the training with her was a nightmare, especially since I had to do all of it myself, online, because she refused to do her job when it started or to do her training in person. Her choice. Completely her choice. I was some bullshit like External Affairs Manager, whatever the fuck that means.

PF: Did she pick up on the training at all, or was it just a formality?

HVS: Anything I gave her, she either forgot or used to the detriment of the project itself. It’s kind of clear to me, unfortunately, that the headstrongness you see, particularly in Dymetri, Susan, and Seraphina—also in Hamza, frankly—is only beneficial when it comes to consolidating power internally, to the detriment of the entire McGill community. And that’s what I think is so sad, not that I hate these people individually. Frankly, I don’t... Besides Seraphina.

NEXT ISSUE: FAUCET NOT ALLOWED TO SAY WHICH PROF IS PROBABLY IN EPSTEIN FILES BUT YOU TOTALLY KNOW WHO WE MEAN

SMUT IS THE ANSWER

SMUT SHOWN TO CORRELATE TO HIGHER
INTELLEGEENCE

wattpadUser Fluffy_Lemons69

As children, we were captivated by tales of freedom. The orphans and/or children of neglect who saved the world in between adventures satisfied our persisting urge to do the same: break our shackles of endless homework and trade them for the comfortable bounds of 350 pages.

We have that freedom now, and God knows that between classes and crowdmarks, the coming-of-age trilogy of Student ID: 123456 barely measures up to a crappy piece of flash-fiction pinned to a grammar school hallway.

Stories are no longer escapes. They are reminders for all the ways we pathetically fail to reach a climax of our own. We have free will, valid ID, and alcohol... but we have also anxiously kept the shackles onto ourselves.

Why am I not liberating my dystopian nation? Why am I not raising an army against my personal arch-enemy? Why am I not solving the mystery of how many hot-dogs it takes for a hot-dog man to be more dog than hot?

And so, I don't read. I don't gaze out my prison window. I keep my eyes trained on the pathetic gray stone riddled with evidence of my own shoddy craftsmanship.

That is until I see their bold eyes from across the room and feel my pants soak through. I would never pursue such a passion in my own life, because it's so far beneath me. It would be stupid... But all experience is good experience, so I suppose this is one travel I must complete via ink trails.

A mother and her daughter's friend. A girl and her friend's mom. Shirts go up. Pants go down. Gazes shift. There's a scandal in the 'ton. There's panting and imagery that cannot legally be pictured. There's no lull. Each sentence contributes to a rising action, leading to an ethereal climax after climax. Before I knew it, I had completed all four hundred pages of this pirated Gospel. Dear readers, I had just read a book, for fun.

All of a sudden, my brain had been wiped clean of five years of Instagram reel abuse.

I became a man of literature. My vocabulary has since expanded. I am no longer iron deficient. The birds are chirping and the grass is green and time has slowed to a more evocative tempo.

This is my protein supplement.

I reflect on my life and realize that lust is the term missing from my model theory textbook. It deceptively advises us to bring rubbers, but it adamantly discourages apples.

My friends, it is a proven fact that communicating information via narrative transportation is the most effective way to reach the masses. Smut is the rhetorical device that keeps you engaged and wanting more.

Journalists continuously fail in their mission to get me to care about stocks and the specifics of whatever the fuck the Blaque Party has been cooking up. This past November experienced the lowest youth-voter turnout of Montreal history.

Modern-day journalism is depressed and deprived of passion. It desperately tries to convince us of global warming, but what if it instead aimed to make us feel and penetrate the ozone layer hole?

Think about it.

Heated Rivalry is the only reason you're aware of the McGill hockey team. Inter-rez sex scandals were the only way you managed to learn anyone's name in first year.

The most significant political act ever has been Donald Trump and Zoran Mamdanis' oval office meet-cute...

McGill University trains its youngest minds in large lecture halls, because it knows the power of those cunty Britney Spears microphones. Don't play modest. Your focus was captured solely by the sensual curves of the headset wrapping around Professor's spectacles.

So, how do we fix the socio-economic state of the world right now?

We must resurrect the retired Tumblr scribes that lay dormant in secondary school English teachers. We must uplift those quiet girls— the ones who presently lurk on Wattpad churning out Pulitzer prize worthy pieces to their thousands of followers, in spite of the fact that “English isn't my first language” and “I had exams this week”. [Excluding Hami-fan writers, of course.]

Ladies, gents, and they/them-s, these soldiers will be the ones to end the Thanksgiving Debates. This battalion will bring peace and unity to even the most thick-headed lacrosse player. It will allow the lesbians to lower their carabiners and join hands in friendship with their no-longer-questionable-forty-year-old-virgin-uncle.

The next steps?

- 1) Exterminate the performative poli-sci ‘journalists’
- 2) Paint the world an attractive Pinterest-red
- 3) Figure out how to get these horny mother-fuckers to leave their rooms and attend a press conference

THE DAY MCGILL SHOWED ME WHO I WAS(N'T)

Eren Atac

It's been a rough semester—essay after research paper after midterm (Life can be tough for Arts students too, I swear!). Today was the last big due date of midterm season. I was up late last night, grinding away on my paper. Red Bull, Celsius, Monster... When one got old, I'd cycle to the next. But the finish line was in sight. I just had to print my essay and hand it in at five.

Things started going downhill on my walk to campus. Halfway through, I hit this nasty patch of ice—one of those evil spots hidden under a thin layer of snow. I fell on my ass, banana peel-style. Great. To make matters worse, everything fell out of my coat pockets—phone, wallet, keys. Only the most essential items, of course. Then this guy started running towards me. I couldn't see his face under his hood, but I assumed he'd give me a helping hand, maybe ask if I was okay.

Nope. He ran by, scooped my phone and wallet out of the snow, and sprinted into the distance as tried to get up. Goddamn it.

I made it to campus, but I still had to print my paper. I was hoping the McLennan staff would let me print it without my ID.

“Good morning!” I said in the cheeriest tone I could muster. “I'm so sorry, but I lost my McGill ID. Would you guys mind printing my paper for me? I can show you my ID on Minerva.”

I needed this. I needed it so bad. The woman at the desk turned to her colleague and they whispered for a few seconds.

“No ID? Wait here, please. Someone will be here to see you shortly.”

Three McGill security officers walked in. I had no idea what was going on. I just needed them to print the paper for me. The guard in front spoke. His tone was cold.

“We're going to need an ID. New policy. You must have your McGill ID on your person at all times.”

“I'm sorry. I lost it this morning. I was robbed.”

“We'll need your government ID, then.”

“They took my whole wallet! I don't have anything...”

“Come with us.”

“Where?”

“Come with us.”

“...”

“New policy. You need to show identification or be barred indefinitely from access to university services.”

“I need to hand in my paper—”

“That includes access to campus and lecture halls.
Come with us.”

“Okay...”

They took me to Burnside, down the stairs, into the basement. I’d studied here before, but the artificial lights that mimicked the sun had turned me off from returning. They took me into a separate room I hadn’t seen before. It was stark with white walls and a solitary chair in the middle of the floor.

“Give us your belongings. Sit down and wait.”

I complied and the officers left. It was 11:00 A.M. I had six hours to turn in my exam. I was hoping this would be resolved soon—the situation was frightening, but not as bad as the prospect of missing the due date I had worked so hard to make.

I waited for a long time. There was no clock, so I couldn’t tell how much time had passed. It could have been an hour, or two, or four. The overhead lighting remained sterile as ever—a poor imitation of the outside world.

Suddenly, a tinny voice began to ring out from a speaker somewhere in the room.

“Who are you?” it said.

“What?”

“Identify yourself. Who are you?” it repeated.

“Uh... I’m a student. I’m a McGill student. I have to turn in a paper. Can you let me go? Or at least let me email my professor about this?”

“Who are you? What is your name?”

I started, but my voice got caught in my throat. I couldn’t respond. What was my name? What was it?

“You are student 26189415. State your year.”

“I’m... I’m a student here. U2.”

“Correct. State your faculty.”

“Arts. Faculty of the Arts.”

“Correct. What is your purpose today?”

“Um... Well, I was trying to turn in my midterm paper. I really should get to that now.”

“Correct. Undergraduate identity training is complete. You may have your belongings.”

The door opened and a security officer came in with my bag. I took it and sprinted out the door and up the stairs. I’d have to find somewhere else to print my paper. I opened my bag mid-walk to make sure nothing was lost. While rifling through my belongings, my hands felt something unexpected. My wallet was there, in my bag. I opened it, and to my surprise, my cards were inside. Without thinking, I glanced at my McGill ID. Something was missing. My name was gone. Beneath my photo, there was only a number: 26189415.

THIRD LINK REBORN

CAQ TO BUILD TUNNEL CONNECTING LEACOCK AND STEWART BIOLOGY BUILDINGS

Gabriel Linaje-Ferrel

In a stunning change of political strategy, the province’s CAQ government has scrapped the Québec-Lévis tunnel in favour of a tunnel linking McGill University’s Leacock and Stewart Biology buildings. “We could not find a single study proving the viability of the initial Third Link”, announced transport minister Jonatan Julien, “so, we have changed gears.” Julien’s comments refer to his government’s infamous plan to build a road tunnel connecting the province’s capital to one of its neighbouring cities. It was conceived to alleviate traffic on the two existing bridges connecting Québec and Lévis. This alternate tunnel would alleviate the foot traffic on two streets to reach the biology building: Peel and the especially perilous Doctor Penfield strip.

“It’s become quite obvious that come wintertime, the state of Doctor Penfield Avenue is unsustainable,”

Julien said. “Slow-walking conversationalist friend groups already clog the narrow sidewalk year-round, but at least the street and muddy lawn are walkable in the fair months. Once the ice glazes the floor and the snowbanks block the parking spots, good luck troopers.” The Doctor Penfield tripping and slipping crisis reached a historic high in January 2024, receiving its own spotlight on the Faucet’s Instagram page. Despite a small dip in face-planting numbers in 2025, each fall was just as silly and preventable as before. The Faucet asked the minister’s office for plans and received a quick sketch from a proud but unnamed intern.

BUSINESS

THE PLUMBER’S FAUCET: THE ONLY HONEST PAPER LEFT AT MCGILL WE CAN PROVE IT TOO, EVEN THOUGH WE DON’T HAVE TO.

Danika Pole

The Tribune

See I know you pride yourself on covering student governance, but who’s closer to Dymetri Taylor (Lil’ Prezzy D-Tay, as he “instructed” us to call him). When D-Tay needs to confide in those he trusts, who does he come to? To whom did he reveal ideas of a sexy Board of Directors Calendar? The lack of good lighting in their office space? He comes running to the Plumber’s Faucet headquarters (located at the back of Gerts Bar) because he knows that we don’t hear, we LISTEN.

Keep going to those council meetings (lame) and those board meetings (lame) while we drink bad (I mean sad, I mean great) pitchers of sangria with the king of the school.

And we want the best publications award back. Finders keepers.

The McGill Daily

Number one, CHANGE YOUR NAME. How, in this day and age, are you still gonna call yourself something so insulting to your readers? To the history of your paper and the land it stands on? I mean, you can’t play dumb forever.

You know it’s wrong to call yourself the “Daily” if you only publish once a week. If we can accept publishing four times a year instead of monthly, you can accept putting out once a week.

Also, I feel the need to bring up the countless articles you have published against Remembrance Day. Specifically the one that referred to the national day of mourning as “the slaughter-glorifying gun-horny narrative of November 11,” and called it a “justification for privileged patriotism.”

And one more note, “RIP Harambe.”

Le Delit

I’ll say this in French so you really get the message: On a tous marée les putes.”

The McGill Reporter

Who?

The Communist Paper

The only paper on this list that I had to PAY for ($5.75 thank you very much), and pay I did because I want what I can’t have, and tracking you down to buy one actually took days.

When I opened up those pages I didn’t know what to expect, except for multiple paragraphs sucking Luigi Mangioni off. And I got that. Thanks.

Spotted McGill

The only real competition on this list. They are not our equals, but they are our fear; For if Spotted McGill was to ever publish their work none of the papers on this list would survive the cultural reset that would impact campus. Eyes everywhere, it’d be like if Gossip Girl and 1984 had a dystopian child that punished falling asleep in McLennan with public execution.

With that in mind, I am a big fan and think you deserve more respect. Maybe we can collab to fix student journalism at McGill once and for all? Please?

A GUIDE TO LATE-STAGE CAPITALISM

Gossip Girl

1. Form a polycule with your friends! It's economically efficient, and at least one of you is bound to be employed at any given time.
2. Hook up with that guy from floor six McLennan! Late-stage capitalism feeds off the fact that it makes the people incel-introverts.
3. Murder a Billionaire! It's not manslaughter if they're an icon. After all, if they have that much money, they shouldn't be that easy to kill.
4. Steal! Why pay for public transport if it's going there anyway?!
5. Smoke that mysterious powder! What do you have to lose?
6. Entertain men! If you can't beat 'em, join 'em!
7. ~six seven~ your way to freedom
8. Make your own country! There's plenty of space up for grabs in the Pacific.
9. Withdraw all of your accounts! Real homo-sapiens use their homegrown meat and blood to pay for their whims: organic, sustainable, and equitable.
10. Die alone! Collapsing on the subway is so overrated.
11. No shirt, no shoes, serve untethered!
12. Be feral! Bite me, try to remind me that I'm alive...
13. Establish a new religion! Give me something to believe in...

REM RIDE GONE WRONG

MURDERED TYCOON TELLS IT ALL

Bennett Samburg

On Saturday, November 15th, I had the supreme pleasure of being among the first civilians to ride on the newly opened Deux-Montagnes line of the REM before it opened officially the following week. It was a terrific journey and I found myself very impressed by its remarkable speed and efficiency. Within minutes, I was transported from McGill's campus, underneath Mount Royal and to Édouard Montpetit metro station in a matter of minutes, a journey that prior to the opening of the new REM line would take over half an hour. Colour me impressed! How lucky are we to live in a city prioritizing public transit that is fast. And don't forget glamorous! As a banking tycoon and one of the wealthiest men in all of Canada, I was afforded my own first-class carriage, private... or so I thought. Paneled in beautiful mahogany, complete with fine gilded detailing, this was among the most beautiful train cars in which I have had the pleasure of riding. The real height of luxury was the afternoon tea service. It was a proper English-style tea of three courses. First came the scones, still warm from the oven, served with decadent clotted cream and perfectly sweet, ruby red raspberry jam, almost as red as the blood I would soon spill. Next came the finger sandwiches: cream cheese and cucumber, and smoked salmon! My favourite! Lastly, French macarons and apple tartlets for dessert. And of course, I had to select a robust and complex Chinese oolong to sip on. I made sure to give my compliments to the chef who prepared this delectable spread. Little did I know that I myself would soon be spread out on the floor of my carriage, soaked in a pool of my own blood and spilt oolong.

After enjoying my tea, I decided to read the paper, specifically my paper, the Montreal Gazette, which I fully own. I find that newspapers I don't own are terribly boring to read as they rarely say anything scandalous about my business competitors. Additionally, I make sure that the Gazette is thorough in its detailing of my recent achievements and acquisitions. Normally it is just orphanages that I plan to turn into gambling dens for the rich and powerful such as myself (could it be that my murder was divine punishment for my greed and misdeeds?), but this week the front page had a resplendent image of myself standing in front of the hospital which I recently purchased from an acquaintance of mine in parliament who gave me a good deal. I think I shall make the hospital into a new stable for my Clydesdale horses.

While pondering this decision, I enjoyed looking at my own face. Since my father in law died due to accidental arsenic poisoning and left me his steel empire in his will, nothing has been able to cheer me up other than admiring my own visage... and a good train ride of course! I would be remiss to not mention the fantastic view out my window of the winter wonderland in which southern Quebec now finds itself. It is a shame that I was stabbed to death in my train car, but that the neverending evergreen forests of Saint-Hermas were the last thing I would ever see was a true blessing from God. Though of course now I am dead and can tell you that God isn't real, yet Satan is. Curious.

You are probably wondering how I died. But why are you wondering that? I just told you that I was stabbed. Does your mind not run as quick as the REM? Oh, you should rephrase your question. Who was it that stabbed me? Well, it was a fellow by the name of Winston Wallace Hugh. Of the Saint-Germain Hughs you ask? The very same. Old W.W. had been my business competitor for many years and he, as well as my father-in-law taking too much time to die and bequeath me the steel wealth I would need to buy the other half of Canadian banks, was one of the reasons I did not come to dominate Canadian banking as a whole until a few years ago. By the grace of God (whom we've previously established does not exist, though I did not know that at the time), I found out W.W.'s grave secret: that he had a mistress. Of course all successful business men have mistresses. They are terribly good at arithmetic after all. But W.W.'s wife did not know that he had a mistress, and he and his wife had signed a pre-nuptial agreement (how foolish of him!) that if he and his wife were to split, he would lose over half of his holdings. So naturally, as any good businessman would, I blackmailed him for three years. Blackmailing pays well, and before you could even say the words "Primary Bank of the Dominion of Canada," I had this country's finances in the palm of my hand.

Unfortunately, I suppose that on this day, W.W. had had enough, deciding to take a dagger and end my extortion once and for all. It was a lovely dagger. The polished mahogany handle matched the wood of the train car, and its silver blade glimmered in the sunshine of a mid-November afternoon. Before stabbing me seventeen times (I counted) in the chest, old W.W. didn't even say anything! How unprofessional! Well, I suppose I will take it up with him when he eventually dies and I meet him here in hell, which seems to be all that there is. At least they gave me a typewriter to let you know that the new Deux-Montagnes line of the REM is a wonderful journey and an invaluable addition to our city's network of public transportation.

URGENT CASTING CALL: LLAMA SEX PARTY. SEND YOUR BEST CAKE TO BIRKS CHAPEL.

Emet Mendelson

HOW TO NOT BE AN INCEL FREAK THIS VAL- ENTINES DAY.

Pope Leo XV

- 1) Wash your hands
- 2) Go outside
- 3) Lock down a baddie target
- 4) Cough on them
- 5) You have the plague
- 6) Suggest that you isolate together
- 7) There's no cure!
- 8) You're stuck together alone, forever!!!!
- 9) Reproduce and populate your private world (Only keep the male babies. Females are too weak for this new world order.)
- 10) Consult the Good Book to figure out how they made the next generation
- 11) Let me know
- 12) Solve my crisis of faith
- 13) Lead me back to the church
- 14) Make my celibacy voluntary
- 15) Or we could just grab food or whatever... maybe you can give me a bass guitar lesson...

BORDER SKIRMISHES ESCALATE, FAUCET DE- CLARES WAR ON FILIPINO STUDENT'S ASSO- CIATION*

Kai Bosniak

This past Thursday, the Faucet decided to declare war on the McGill University Filipino Asian Student's Association (MUFASA), which hosts meetings celebrating the culture of the world's fourteenth most populous country.

"They've had it too good for too long," announced a source inside the Faucet.

"Damn them!" he added.

* Editor's Note: No it does not. The Faucet fully supports the MUFASA and its celebration of Filipino culture on campus. Please direct all complaints to Kai Bosniak, 1402 rue Saint-Faux, Montreal, QC, H4P 6X9.

ARTS & CULTURE

ERROR 404: SECTION NOT FOUND

SPORTS*

DEEP SAINI UNVEILS NEW MCGILL MASCOT, THE CASTRATOR

Kai Bosniak

Move over, Marty! This past Saturday, McGill revealed its new mascot, the Castrator. The Castrator is meant to establish the university's new, more modern, asexual image.

The 20 foot tall, grotesque, ceaselessly crying monster is aptly named The Castrator, because of what he does.

"He's named The Castrator because of what he does," commented President Saini, "His 20 foot stature is perfect for cartwheels, slam dunks, and near-instant castrations. We know the vast majority of the McGill community will love him."

President Saini declined to comment on who was inside the suit.

"Suit?" he asked.

The Castrator will make his public debut at the upcoming Redbirds game. He hopes to charm with his signature dance (the Carumba), his charismatic "smile", and the surgical removal of men's sexual organs.

So far, everyone loves The Castrator, except for some. Emet Mendelson (U3, Sciences) agreed to comment.

"Haters be jackin," asserted Mendelson. "They don't like him because of the thing that he does [castration]. They hate him because they assume he's evil, but I see him as just a tool. I could no more hate a pair of scissors."

This move comes at the forefront of McGill's newly proposed full rebrand, slated to include a name change to "New McGill."

TOP 3 MOST DANGEROUS WINTER OLYMPICS EVENTS

Kai Bosniak

Every four years, you watch with bated breath. As they fly off ramps, race down slopes, and ram into each other at top speed, you hope against hope: just this once, will one of them die? You know this voice is wrong. You know it's terribly naughty to yearn for the sick thrill of watching a human crumple. You know those squirrels you killed when you were twelve deserved better. And so, you know that you must suppress this hope. But still, you wonder: what are the most dangerous Winter Olympic games?

3. Snowboarding

The first time I witnessed a snowboarding crash, the grin plastered on my face all day made my own mother afraid of me. These daredevils flying down hills at untold speeds are truly just asking for it. What a pity if they were to get hurt!

2. Curling

"Tragedy is when I cut my finger. Comedy is when you fall in an open sewer and die." These words have never been proven more true than the day I spilled hot soup (tomato) in my lap while watching curling. Not only did I burn my tum-tum, I also stained my Hooters pajama pants. Having experienced suffering myself, I was led to wonder if I shouldn't root for the pain of others.

1. Ski Jump

Crash crash crash crash crash crash crash

IRON RING ADDED TO OLYMPICS LOGO

Emmet Fynes

Every year, engineering graduates across Canada receive iron rings to mark the successful completion of their degrees. This year, the Olympics will be following suit, adding an eighth, iron ring to the world-famous games' logo in honour of Canada's esteemed plumbers.

* Editor's Note: The Plumber's Faucet does not condone athleticism in any form. Mascots and the Olympics normalize harmful mob-culture and sweating, and that's not okay. We recommend finding better hobbies, like engineering.

HEATED RIVALRY SHRINE

REVIEW: UNHEATED RIVALRY

Emmet Fynes

Recently, everyone's talking about "Heated Rivalry," allegedly the steamiest hockey show to ever exist. This past Saturday, I decided to give it a watch myself and see what all the fuss is about.

It's true: the chemistry between Hudson and Ilya is palpable. However, I couldn't help but find myself distracted by the frigid temperature of my apartment, which had lost heating that morning. I developed hypothermia by the third episode.

Rather than my rivalry with Hydro-Quebec, I choose to blame my subsequent hospital visit on the show's writing: not heated enough.

ABOVE
"Prestige" by Britney Vu

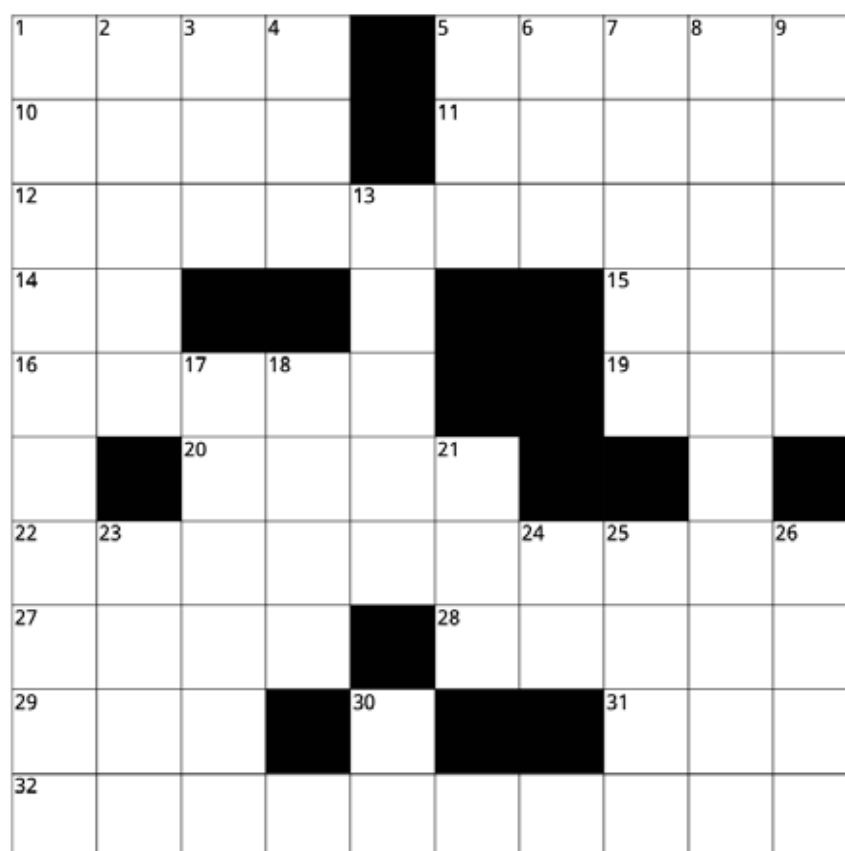

BELOW
"Canada's Boyfriend" by
Roxanne Tesar

You can't do this crossword.

It was made by our last editor-in-chief, Charlie Scholey, who disappeared just days later. Beyond rumours that it is cursed, it is also impossible. Seriously, try it if you don't believe me. I dare you. If you somehow manage to solve it, send your answer to us, and we will straight-up put you on the cover of our next issue.

ACROSS

- 1 Collected 4 Kids
 5 ROT13 of nfnog
 10 Violinist
 Leopold
 11 Canon Rival?
 12 Not a mortal sin, per the Brotherhood of Man
 14 Circumference over diameter
 15 Ones who could link: abbr
 16 "Better yet, go to times square, take a picture of me with a
 _____"
 19 "Sprechen ____
 Deutsch?"
 20 Islands
 22 Eastwood/Hack man film of 1992
 27 Lenient
 28 Bone
 marrow-born immune cells
 29 Nashville sch.
 31 Open source media player
 32 Lie from a group project member?

DOWN

- 1 Where Bart and
 Lisa stay
 sleepaway
 2 Jumbled vowels
 3 2012 Taylor
 Swift album
 4 ____ Lanka
 5 Rainbow shape
 6 Prefix shared by
 Lewis Hamilton
 and Mick Jagger
 7 Substances that neutralize alkalis
 8 "Birth of Venus"
 Painter
 9 Parsley, Sage,
 Rosemary, and

 13 One who works with Quercus robur
 17 Qui manque de netteté
 18 How many lawyers you got,
 per 21 Savage
 21 One above Cpl.
 23 It smells
 24 Smaller microchip?
 25 Musician's
 YouTube Suffix
 26 Indian corp. law board
 30 Train above the road